

May we pick your brain?

Champlain College knows that networking is a valuable component in the career development process. That's why we're eager to help students learn how to connect with employers and professionals in their fields of study early on.

Could you recommend professional associations that are relevant to the students you're currently recruiting? (Think of local and national organizations that would provide opportunities for our students to learn about the industry and rub elbows with potential colleagues and peers.)

What conferences and conventions would you suggest they attend?

Are there trade publications, periodicals, blogs or listservs they should check into? (Please list below.)

Thank you for sharing your thoughts on networking possibilities for Champlainers. If you and/or your organization would like to be directly involved in the process, please see the other side of this sheet for opportunities to participate first-hand!

Count me in!

Yes, I'd be interested in learning more about these kinds of opportunities to help prepare students for the "real world":

- Informational Interviews: Provide students the chance to learn about "a day in the life" through informational interviews that can be conducted one-on-one in person, through a personal phone call and/or via a conference call with a small group of students.
- Practice Interviews: Help prepare students for the interview process. These can be conducted at your facility, on campus or via the telephone.
- Guest Speaker: Present job and/or industry related information during a class, at a club meeting, on a panel, via teleconference or at an informational session.
- Site Visit: Invite a group of students to tour your facility.
- Point Person: Provide suggestions for job seekers that we can integrate into our blog, "Real advice from working professionals."

NO WORRIES. Expressing interest does not commit you to anything! We're simply trying to assess interest and opportunity.
